

Several ISO standards are moving toward revision, with publications rolling out through 2026. ISO 14001:2026 is the first to be published, followed closely by RC14001:2026/RCMS this week, and a revised ISO 19011 will follow soon after.

For many of you, this will feel familiar. Revisions come and go. The intent, however, should not be about adjusting language in a manual or updating a few procedures to stay compliant. Use the opportunity to pause and ask a more fundamental question. Is the system we have truly helping us run the business, or are we running the business around the system? Revisions provide a natural point to examine that distinction.

At QMII, we support organizations through this with that perspective in mind. Sometimes the need is straightforward transition support. At other times, it is a deeper reset to bring the system back into alignment with purpose and performance. Both require more than interpretation of a standard. They require engagement with the system as a living part of the organization.

In this edition of The Globe, we share two new articles, highlight training aligned with the upcoming revisions, welcome new members to our team, and offer perspectives intended to keep you aligned, informed, and thinking a step ahead.

What Happens If You Fail An ISO Audit?

A Survivor's Guide

By Dr. IJ Arora

In a perfect world, an audit is like a gap analysis to help a business get better. However, for most professionals, failing an audit feels like an exam grade on a report card that their boss (and their customers) will see....

When Procedures Look Perfect but Performance Doesn't: Audit the Effectiveness of Process Design

By Liyuwork (Liyu) Shiferaw

A system can appear complete, structured, and aligned with standards, but if outcomes remain inconsistent, delayed, or dependent on workarounds, the problem is not documentation. It is more of a process design issue. What makes this particularly dangerous is that....

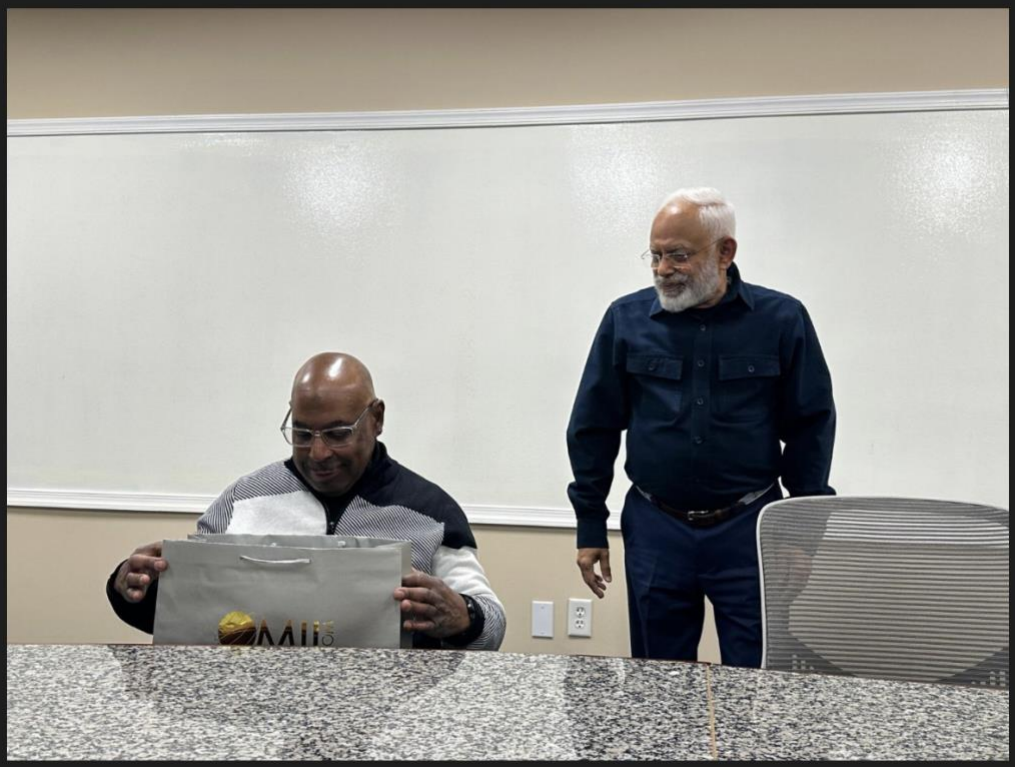
Thank You Mr. Tony Morris!



Dr. IJ Arora, Owner and Chairman of QMII and the QMII Team welcomed Mr. Tony Morris (ex USCG) to QMII office to celebrate and thank him for his service to our country.

The QMII Team having the honor and pleasure of meeting Tony's Family.

A thoughtful gift from our longtime friend at the U.S. Coast Guard, Mr. Anthony Morris, being enjoyed by the QMII team. Moments like these are a great reminder of the strong relationships built over time.

In the photos, Jake can be seen embracing the moment, cornhole and all, highlighting the spirit of camaraderie as well as multiple missed throws.
